

Oliver Tull Introduction

Oliver has been a comedian and performer for most of his life, appearing in movies, television shows, and over 10,000 live appearances, including events for companies such as Earth X, Domino's Pizza, Southwest Airlines, Hyatt, American Express and the United States Congress.

His improvisational style and quick wit have gotten rave reviews from a wider array of audiences. Oliver has also had a successful career in television, appearing in the HBO miniseries Love And Death, as cohost of CW's Eye Opener morning program, in radio as the cohost of Fanboy Radio on KTCU and in movies such as The Life of David Gale and Saving Jessica Lynch.

In addition to being featured as the Elephant God Ramush in the Dragon Ball television series, Oliver also lent his talents to the villainous Breed in the historic anime One Piece. He has also done voices for many video games, including the Borderland series, Aliens: Colonial Marines, as well as a numerous local and national commercials.

Oliver's short film Today and Tomorrow was named a finalist in the Fort Worth film Festival, and his latest short film This Is Not A Chair was a finalist in the Hollywood Black film festival.